Juily Phun will be speaking about the new project she initiated last year: The Chinese American Digital Oral History Project in Los Angeles and San Gabriel Valley. There will be a display about the current project her team is working on in collaboration with the Chinese American Engineers and Scientists Scholarship Foundation of Southern California. She will also speak about the previous oral history project done at UCLA that led to both her dissertation and current work on Chinese herbalists.

Juily Phun received her BA in history from the University of California, San Diego (2000) and an MA in history from California State University, Los Angeles (2006). She completed her dissertation entitled “Contours of Care: the Influenza Pandemic, Public Health, and the Asian American Community in Los Angeles, 1918-1941” from the University of California, Irvine (2016). Dr. Phun has been a high school teacher in the San Gabriel Valley and an educator for over fifteen years. She has been a lecturer at Cal State LA in the history department and now in Asian and Asian American Studies since the completion of her masters in 2006. She considers teaching as an integral component of her education and research. Juily Phun’s research centers on Los Angeles as a crossroads for discussions of belonging, exclusion, and contention. She is particularly attracted to the role of public health as a site for these expressions, especially as it relates to the state, the body, and immigration with an eye towards race and gender.

Mission Statement
The Chinese Historical Society of Southern California was organized in November 1975. The purposes of the Society are:
1) to bring together people with a mutual interest in the important history and historical role of Chinese and Chinese Americans in southern California;
2) to pursue, preserve and communicate knowledge of this history; and
3) to promote the heritage of the Chinese and Chinese American community in support of a better appreciation of the rich, multicultural society of the United States.
Chopsticks in the Land of Cotton by John Jung

This month we were treated to yet another outstanding talk by long-time Chinese Historical Society supporter and member John Jung. Jung is a Professor Emeritus of Psychology from the California State University in Long Beach who continues to write about the Chinese American peoples and the prejudice they faced integrating into American society. In honor of the 10th anniversary of his book, Chopsticks in the Land of Cotton, Jung came to Castellar Elementary to give an overview about the development of the Chinese immigrant community in the Mississippi River Delta. He posed and answered questions about how Chinese peoples navigated their way through the already complicated class and race divisions in the area. Also, he talked about other developments in his research of Chinese Americans in the Mississippi River Delta, including creating a Facebook group where Chinese Americans with ties to the Mississippi Delta can reconnect and learn more about their family histories. Lastly, there was a Q&A session where those in the audience also shared how they faced prejudice growing up as Chinese Americans in the South or the Mississippi River Delta. In addition to Jung’s talk, Linda Bentz brought out many treasures from the CHSSC archives, so make sure to come to each meeting so that you won’t miss out!

Calling All “Photographic Memories”!

Our archives are filled with countless photos from our many meetings, field trips, dinners, and events over the past 43 years. CHSSC has scheduled a gathering for interested members, especially those with “total recall”, to begin the necessary task of identifying people and locations in those photos. We can walk down memory lane with our friends as we try to recognize people from 20, 30, or 40 years ago. It will be a day of camaraderie and fun, and we need your help. We have scheduled this semi-informal event at Atherton Baptist Homes in Alhambra, where a few of our long time members (with still young memories!) reside. As this is a private facility and parking is limited, we suggest that you carpool. Light refreshments will be served.

Date: Monday June 28, 2018  Time: 1:00-3:00 PM
Location: Atherton Baptist Homes in Alhambra - 735 Irving St., Alhambra CA - Community Room, 2nd floor
Please RSVP to CHSSC at chssc@hotmail.com so that we can plan for our refreshments.

Archive Spotlight

The Archives Committee is pleased to announce that we have received a grant from the Friends of the Chinatown Library to digitize the Duty and Honor Collection. In 1994, the Chinese Historical Society of Southern California (CHSSC) launched an ambitious project to honor Chinese American World War II veterans from Southern California. Hundreds of stories were gathered from men and women who served during the Second World War. This work culminated in a CHSSC-published book, Duty and Honor: A Tribute to Chinese Americans World War II Veterans of Southern California, edited by CHSSC member and UCLA Asian American Studies librarian Marjorie Lee. This special community-based history book and research collection includes anecdotes from veterans who were POWs in Germany, participated in major battles including the invasion of Normandy, and served in various military capacities, including the Army, the Navy, the Marines, the Counter Intelligence Corps, and the famed Flying Tigers. This book and the Duty and Honor collection of research materials held by the CHSSC remain rich sources for scholars conducting work on Chinese American World War II veterans.

On the 20th anniversary of the publication of Duty and Honor, this project returns to the Duty and Honor collection with efforts to preserve and update this important collection. This grant would support the first phase of this project, which includes three parts: 1) digitizing materials from the Duty and Honor collection to preserve the archival materials to a 21st century standard; 2) producing transcription summaries for oral history interviews in the collection to make it easier for scholars to navigate the oral histories; 3) and building a finding aid for the collection to upload to the Online Archive of California (OAC) for scholars to find and use our collection.

We want to thank the Friends of Chinatown Library for their generous support. We will provide periodic updates to CHSSC members as the project progresses.

Notes on Chinese American History

A monthly column about Chinese American History by CHSSC member, William Gow.

At the end of December, my wife and I spent a few days in Portland, Oregon where we visited the local Chinatown. As in many other North American Chinatowns, a massive gate welcomed us to the community, but beyond the gate we found only a handful of Chinese restaurants, most of which seemed to be clinging to existence. A large neon-sign for the old Hung Far Low Chop Suey restaurant pointed to better decades before. While most of the Chinese restaurants in Portland’s Chinatown seemed to be struggling, there was one destination in Portland’s Chinatown that all our guidebooks stated we had to visit: the Lan Su Garden.

The garden opened in the fall of 2000 as part of a sister city arrangement between Portland and the Chinese port city of Suzhou. Artisans from Suzhou constructed the garden in part with rock imported from China. Constructed to represent a private home of a wealthy family in sixteenth century China, Lan Su Garden is perfectly maintained and strikingly beautiful. On the day we visited snow and ice clung to the rooftops of buildings and tops of trees. Unlike the struggling Chinese restaurants outside, the garden attracts a sizable number of tourists who take in its small lake, terrace, and teahouse. Every Portland guidebook that I looked at listed the garden as one of the city’s main attractions. While ideally the garden would revitalize the local Chinese American businesses, on my visit, I could not help but think about the ways in which the garden might actually serve to deflect the tourist gaze away from the history of the Chinatown and its residents. On the day we visited, none of its exhibits provided any background on the history of the Chinese American community in Portland. Instead I saw the Lan Su garden as attempting to provide visitors with a type of idealized re-creation of particular vision of Chinese history and culture as static, perhaps even ossified. In 1978, the scholar Edward Said introduced the idea of Orientalism to describe the ways in which the West created an objectified and imagined Orient. According to Said, one of the purposes of Orientalism was to portray the West as dynamic, modern, and forward moving in contrast to the Orient of the Western imagination, which was often portrayed as a passive object resigned to the past. In this way the imagined Orient became the object against which Western modernity defined itself. Despite being a co-venture between the China and the United States, I could not help but wonder if the garden in its own also represents a type of Orientalism. Not only did the garden explain little about the history of Chinatown in Portland but it also made no effort to explain the long history of similar gardens built mainly for tourists in the United States which stretch back to the World’s Fairs of the nineteenth century.

As a visitor to Portland, I was much more interested in learning about the history of the Hung Far Low sign and than in visiting the garden. I later learned that the sign was for a restaurant originally opened by local resident Wong On in 1928. As CHSSC member John Jung points out in his book, Sweet and Sour: Life in Chinese Restaurants, this was a moment when it was common for Chinese restaurants to transliterate their names rather than give restaurants equivalent names in English. Jung points out that the name Hung Far Low means Red Flower Tower or Apricot Blossom Building, and yet the name as transliterated came to be a source of amusement for non-Chinese speaking visitors. The restaurant moved in 2005 to east 82nd Street, where there is a growing Asian American community, before closing for good in 2015. The sign was removed in 2008 but a community effort eventually led to its restoration and rededication in 2010. Sadly on my visit, there was no place in Chinatown to learn this history. This summer the opening of the new Portland Chinatown Museum will give visitors a chance to learn about the history of Chinese Americans in the region. I cannot wait to return for a visit.

The Chinese Historical Society would like to thank all of its members for making our 43rd annual Golden Spike Award’s Gala such a success. Continuing from last year’s theme of “Storytellers,” this year we honored those who have used film to chronicle what it means to be Chinese American. We are proud to present Golden Spike Awards to: Felicia Lowe, Arthur Dong, Pamela Tom, Visual Communications, and Renee Tajima-Peña. We would also like to thank our Diamond Sponsor, the Los Angeles Chinatown Corporation, as well as our Gold Sponsor, Cathay Bank, for their generous support. We look forward to seeing you again next year!
CHSSC’s Raffle and Silent Auction Committee Receives the Spotlight

With another successful Golden Spikes Award dinner in the record books, attention is now turned to the dedicated women of the Raffle and Silent Auction Committee: Yvonne Chang, Marian Chew, Shirley Chu Ng, Anna Gee and Jeannie Liu. Years ago, Yvonne was CHSSC’s administrator, Marian was the Project Manager of the Portraits of Pride book program, and Jeannie a board member. Since no one stepped forward to work on gathering the raffle prizes or creating the center pieces, the three women, with their gifts of creativity and artistry, volunteered to do the job.

In 2015, Shirley became a board member and recruited Anna to join the committee, totaling the committee members to five people. Although the women all lead busy lives, they continue to volunteer every year for CHSSC’s annual gala. Below are some of the reasons in their own words:

Yvonne: “I like shopping and organizing events. The addition of Anna Gee and Shirley made the task more fun and easier.

Anna: “The opportunity to utilize some of my computer knowledge also presented a great challenge. The addition of Jeannie and Yvonne made working nice and fun. They are hard-working volunteers and along with Marian’s guidance and connection with the Board and Staff made working together all the more pleasant--four years together.”

Jeannie: “I have been involved with the dinner committee or raffle committee ever since I became a board member about 10 years ago. Marian, Yvonne and I were on the raffle committee for several years and I enjoyed working with them. We always had fun creating gift baskets and soliciting donations. Now with Shirley and Anna in the group. I feel even more committed to this volunteer activity.”

Shirley: “We met as a team to work on soliciting donations, selecting prizes, organizing, and working out the displaying the prize tables at the banquet. We also took care of the raffle ticket sales, and the logistics of workflow at the event.

The 40th anniversary was a big success. We learned a great deal from that event and try to make improvements on it each year. We are always overwhelmed by the generosity of the donors to the event and varied prizes.

Marian Chew is our anchor and gives us much needed support and guidance. Through the years, we have enjoyed working together.”
